

We open on garden decorations in an overgrown yard. We then push in to one garden decoration in particular— a watering can.

We cut to a truck driving down the road. It is an old beat up truck. The truck hits a rock in the road and the truck's muffler comes flying off the truck. We watch the truck drive away in a cloud of smoke.

The truck arrives at the overgrown yard, Mrs. Maplewood's house. Two highschool boys climb out of the truck. They are dismayed at the state of the yard that they are about to have to mow. The front yard is worse than the backyard so they play rock paper scissors to see who has to mow the front. Of course Jacob, our main character, loses the game.

Jacob begins to mow the front yard when he hits a rock hidden in the tall grass. The rock rockets straight towards, you guessed it, the watering can. The watering can spins high through the air and lands with a thud in the grass. Jacob, stunned, runs over to the watering can.

But, the watering can is doing something very strange— it is in the grass but still spinning like crazy. As the watering can continues to spin in the grass, Jacob leans down to examine it. He touches it and it stops spinning. He then picks it up and that is when he notices the large dent in the watering can, put there by the rock.

He rubs the dent but there is nothing to be done, the can is damaged for good. He puts the can back where it belongs. The dent is very noticeable. On second thought, he turns the can around so that the dent doesn't face outward. He walks away to continue mowing the yard. As he is starting his mower with his back to the can, pink smoke starts to come out of the can.

Smoke rises and rises until there is a large pillar of pink smoke stemming from the spigot of the watering can. But Jacob doesn't notice. Jacob just continues to mow the yard, and slowly the pink smoke fades away.

With one difficulty after another, mowing this yard is a challenge. Jacob is starting to get frustrated. Finally, when he realizes that he has accidentally dumped all of the gas out of the mower by trying to fix something relating to the mower blades, he throws up his hands in frustration and lets out a cry. Turning back to the truck to get some more gas, he mumbles under his breath, "I wish this yard would just mow itself."

BOOM. A blast of pink smoke lifts him off his feet and throws him across the yard. Pink smoke covers the entire yard. After a little bit the pink smoke fades, revealing a perfectly mown yard in pristine condition. Jacob is stunned and can't believe his eyes.

Out walks Mrs. Maplewood from the house. She was bringing Jacob some water and is shocked to see that he is already finished. Jacob is both confused and concerned about the whole thing.

Jacob gets into the truck to wait for his friend to finish the backyard. He tries to turn the truck on, but it doesn't start. After trying to start the truck multiple times, he is fed up and leans back in his seat. He wishes the truck would start, and then the hood explodes with pink smoke.

We then cut to the muffler still sitting in the middle of the road, and watch as it animates to life. It rockets off, down the road towards the parked truck. It slams into the truck, fixing the truck, and then the truck starts by itself.

Jacob is baffled, but slowly starts to put two and two together. Every time he says "I wish" it comes true. He must have a super power. To test this, Jacob wishes for the first thing that pops into his head, "I wish I had... an ice cream cone?" BOOM, a blast of pink smoke.

Jacob comes climbing out of the truck, coughing and sputtering. In his hand, he holds an ice cream cone. Elated by his success, Jacob immediately wishes for something he really really wants. "I wish I had a beard!" Nothing happens. "I wish I had a mustache?" Nothing happens again. Confused, Jacob tries a new tack. "I wish I had a million dollars!" Nothing. "A thousand dollars?" Nothing. "I WISH I had a thousand dollars?" Still nothing.

Dejected, Jacob looks down at his ice cream cone. Well, at least he can have this. But as he begins to take a bite he is startled by his friend suddenly showing up from the back yard. The ice cream flies out of the cone and lands with a "plop" on the ground. His friend asks him how he is already finished with the yard, but Jacob has no clue and simply shrugs.
